KUSC enables the University to broaden its service to the community by reaching many thousands of persons who are unable to come to the campus. The University hopes that the radio audience may benefit and profit by the programs offered by KUSC, for that is its purpose.

DR. FRED D. FAGG
President
University of Southern California

The development of radio departments and broadcasting stations in American Universities is significant testimony to the recognition of the increasing importance of radio and television in our national, economic, and personal lives. Education could not escape the influence and impact of these two powerful media of communication even if it wished to do so. We at the University of Southern California are definitely aware of our responsibilities and opportunities in the training of young men and women in these fields; in the provision of the finest type of programs possible on our own frequency modulation station, KUSC; in setting up facilities for research which should be of value to the industry, to education, and to the listener; and in working with the industry at every point at which cooperation may be mutually helpful in raising standards and in making radio and television better serve our people and the American way of life.
